Conquering Arthritis, as a manual for others who wish to cure their own arthritis.

When conventional medical treatment did little to improve her debilitating arthritis, author Barbara Allan took matters into her own hands. Through painstaking medical research, she left her wheelchair behind and completely healed her disease.

Now she has written a book,

Barbara’s Story

It all started when ... Barbara at the young age of 25, developed arthritis that left her in chronic, overwhelming pain. In fact, it was often difficult for her to walk without passing out and she relied on an electric cart to get around. At the time, she was a graduate student studying molecular biology at Washington University in St. Louis, one of the premier medical research centers in the country. After years of research, she developed her own cure and is now completely healed.

Barbara loves telling ...

How she discovered that an allergy to corn was a key underlying cause of her arthritis. How astounded she was to find the many surprising places corn allergens are hidden, including in the binders of prescription arthritis medicine. How she needed an hour less sleep a night when she finally identified and eliminated the last hidden source of corn in her life: her toothpaste. And how she has now desensitized her body’s response to corn and is able to eat it freely with no resulting pain. How meditation and massage also released ingrained pain patterns from her body

Barbara says, “The sad fact is that most people with arthritis who use conventional medical therapies never get better. I was able to get well only when I switched to proven alternative therapies that actually corrected the underlying causes of my arthritis.”
